OMFIF appoints Head of Education

London, 15 July 2010

OMFIF, a body bringing together central banks and sovereign wealth funds with the private sector, has appointed Malan Rietveld as Head of OMFIF Education in a move to develop executive education and training services.

Mr Rietveld has worked for four years in providing research services and training for central banks. He joined the Official Monetary and Financial Institutions Forum on 1 July. He will also take a leading role in OMFIF's economic coverage activities and write a monthly column in the OMFIF Bulletin.

David Marsh, OMFIF Co-chairman, said, 'We are delighted that Malan is joining us to develop the important area of education and training services for the official sector.'

Malan Rietveld said, 'I look forward to building world-class educational services for central banks, financial supervisors and sovereign funds.'

Notes for Editors

OMFIF is a global body for high-level confidential dialogue between central banks, sovereign wealth funds and private financial institutions.

Until 2009 Malan Rietveld was an editor and seminar producer at Central Banking Publications. He is the editor of three books on sovereign wealth funds and also served as the economics editor of 'Central Banking', writing and editing numerous volumes and articles on monetary policy, reserves management and financial supervision. He has a Master's degree in Economics from the University of Leuven and a Master's degree in Economic History from the London School of Economics.
