OMFIF's five institutes offer specialised analysis and interactions with key players globally on economics and monetary policy, wealth management, digital finance, sustainability and sovereign debt matters.

Where global policy-makers meet

The EMP Institute convenes leaders from public and private sector institutions to discuss macroeconomic trends and shape the future of monetary policy and political economy.

In an environment trusted to keep to market neutrality rules, EMP is a platform for worldwide private-public sector exchanges, where members discuss best practice and investors are able to safely share information on their asset allocation plans and ruminate on their asset allocation plans.

The future of money is here

The DMI was founded based on the needs of central banks to further understand the emerging digital economy. Today the DMI is the leading convenor between the public and private sector on digital currencies and the future of capital markets.

We provide a trusted platform for our global community of central banks, multinational financial services, payment service providers, commercial banks and technology providers to shape the dialogue on the future of money. Driven by central banks, the DMI is the go-to place for policy discussions on central bank digital currencies and all related issues.

Driving ESG transformation in finance

The SPI is a high-level community of policy-makers, investors, data providers and regulators. It engages with the Network for Greening the Financial System and market participants to facilitate discussions around environmental, social and governance regulation, supervision and standard setting, climate risk management, green capital markets and data.

A new era for government funding

OMFIF's SDI is dedicated to convening sovereign, supranational and agency bond market participants: leading public sector issuers, investors and investment banks. The SDI offers a neutral platform for borrowers alongside influential investors and expert intermediaries to discuss issues, explore challenges and examine opportunities for shaping the future of debt capital markets across emerging and advanced economies.

Our reach

OMFIF analysis draws on the expertise of in-house specialists in Europe, Asia and the US to lead discussion on global policy and investment themes important to central banks, public investors and regulators.

Our independence and global network encourage regular public sector contribution to our research. As a result, our content is widely consumed by central banks, public pension and sovereign funds, multilateral institutions and the private sector, as outlined in this breakdown of downloads for our flagship publication, the Global Public Investor.

OMFIF provides excellent reach into the public and private asset management arenas, important engagement with central banks and an effective means to influence these audiences with thought leadership and content marketing.
